First of all, you should know that if you're toying with the idea of moving, especially if you live in the U.S., you're definitely not alone.

Overall, Americans are not strangers to the idea of moving. In fact, more people in the U.S. tend to move on a regular or semi-regular basis than those living in other areas of the world. According to one Gallup poll, adults who live in the United States are among the world's most mobile populations, with one in four relocating within the country in just the past five years.

But, what drives Americans to trade one piece of paradise for another? And, is there ever a good time, or a good reason, to sell your house fast?

If you're among the many wanna-be soon-to-be migrants in the United States, stick around! We're uncovering the top 3 reasons you should sell your house fast, here!

Help! I Want to Sell My House Fast!

There's a big difference between selling your house versus selling your house fast. If you've decided to sell your home fast in Colorado Springs, you still may not be as motivated as the homeowner down the street who's screaming "Sell my house fast!"

After all, rarely does selling a house on today's housing market equate to what some would term "a quick sale".

The most recent real estate market summary published by Realtor.com reveals that as of November 2020, homes sat on the market for an average of almost 60 days before they actually sold.

60 Days?! For a super-motivated seller, that's not so fast, right?

It's true that some people have ample justified reasons to sell fast while others might be perfectly content to chill in place for a while before they bid their house one final adieu.

So, which group do you fall under? Is the best time to sell your house (truly) now....or later?

Well, the answer to that question largely depends on your motives. For some, selling a house as quickly as possible is the best solution. Truth be told, for some, it's the only solution.

Facing Foreclosure

If you sell your house too fast, or for the wrong reasons, you could be putting yourself through undue stress. And, nobody wants that.

On the other hand, hanging on to a property that's already a lost cause could cause you unnecessary trouble, both now and in the future. And, you certainly don't want to take on any future headaches that you could potentially avoid, if at all possible.

If you're facing a foreclosure, even if you aren't exactly thrilled with the idea, it very well may be the best time to sell your home...and fast.

Unfortunately for many homeowners, foreclosures in the U.S. have recently picked up at a staggering rate. In October of this year, despite government action, foreclosures increased by 20%.

What some homeowners who have gotten behind on their house payments don't realize is that you have the option to sell your house up until the bank takes possession of it, or until the mortgage holder sells it at an auction. Once either of these things happens, then your options diminish considerably.

But, if you're still the owner of your house? Then, you can still potentially sell your home, use the earnings to pay off the balance owed, and walk away without a foreclosed home tarnishing your credit for years to come.

If you find that selling your home fast is the only way to save yourself from experiencing bank foreclosure, there's a good chance that selling fast could be your best option.

Moving On Up

But, let's say that your circumstances are different than those described above. Instead of selling your house because of what you stand to lose, you're thinking of selling because of what you stand to gain.

This is another not-so-uncommon scenario that many folks face when they get an awesome out-of-state job offer. Or, they say yes to marrying their partner who lives in another area. Or, they learn that their family will soon be growing by two tiny feet.

Opportunity sometimes strikes fast (such as is often the case with dream job offers in a new city). And, as we all know, nothing can stop mother nature (when a baby is coming, there's not much anyone can do about the timing).

If you're deciding to sell your house because you're moving up in the world, congratulations! It makes the deal that much sweeter when you're leveling up. And when time is of the essence, it can also make for a motivated seller.

In cases where you're gaining more than you are losing by selling your home, start packing! In fact, there's no need to read any further. Stop wasting time and go sell your house!

A Fresh Start

Maybe your circumstances fall somewhere in the middle of the two scenarios described here. There isn't anything huge sitting on the line when it comes to selling your home, perhaps. You just need a fresh start.

This, too, can be one of the more obvious reasons to sell your home, fast. If your home represents a rut that's got you stuck in the past, maybe it's time that you got out.

For many of us, the home we live in is full of memories, some good, and some bad. Staying in a home after experiencing loss or sadness can be a constant reminder of the pain you've suffered.

Such is the case for some homeowners after they've lost a loved one who they lived with for many years. The constant reminding of their loss may prove to be too much to bear.

Many divorced couples opt to sell their home after they've decided to part ways. This can be a good decision for a number of reasons, including the opportunity for a fresh start.

If the home you live in is no longer filled with happiness, selling it could be the way to go.
